Pride of Opinion.

BY J. B. JOHNSON.
If the force of the pride of opinion always produced a death-dealing result, there would certainly arise great distress and inconvenience to society, for we, now and then, meet individuals engaged in the contests of the business of communities whose minds are entirely given over to an impression that they, par excellence, are most entitled to have the greatest deference paid their opinions, and who look upon all who differ from them as too perverse for tolerance, and as too insufferable to be worthy of the slightest respect. The mere venture of calling into question the soundness of their judgment, is enough to forfeit their countenance, and they regard those who oppose their opinions as personal enemies, too obstinate to merit even the ordinary amenities of life. Such persons are usually so opinionated that they scarcely ever occur to them that others have an equal right to their opinions, and that, in all probability, those who differ from them are just as honorable and sincere in their conclusions as they themselves claim to be. Hence, unfairness is as much seen in the mental concerns of life as it is in the business relations of men, and in no particular is it more evident than in the intolerant spirit of opposition which some persons evince towards those with whom they differ in business, religion and politics. No feeling can be more unworthy of the individual who entertains it, or more unfair to those against whom it is directed; for, as it is difficult to find two men exactly alike in external physical appearance, so it is equally unusual to find two of the same mental attributes, who ex-mine abstract questions of religion and politics in an identical manner, and educe conclusions precisely the counterparts of each other. Therefore mankind could not, if the trial were made, be of the same opinion on all subjects, which have neither philosophical nor mathematical stability in the economy of the natural order of things. Nature too, delights in variety, and men vary as much in particular or special resemblance as the leaves of a tree, or the blades of the same grass. It is the innate attribute of men to think, and it is their inherent and uncontrollable disposition to think differently, and it is just as uncharitable and unreasonable for one man to be an enemy of another because he differs with him in his opinions, as it would be for him to be an enemy of another because he differs from him in physical appearance. The injunction implied in the principle of freedom of opinion, is charity and tolerance in the recognition of the operations of the differences of opinions, and to feel under all circumstances that it is not only consistent with a man's pride of opinion to be charitable and tolerant towards those who entertain adverse views, but absolutely his duty, as a reasonable being, not to allow the strength of his opinions to interrupt the ordinary amenities of life between himself and those with whom he may differ on themes of religion and politics; for the man who has neither charity nor tolerance for the opinions of others is an unpleasant companion, a disagreeable neighbor, and a slave to selfishness, without knowing aught of the pleasure of that pleasant pastime and mental profit, which arises from a liberal interchange of opposite views and opinions.

THE PIG'S START IN LIFE.—The pig is an animal that has its wits about it quite as soon after birth as the chicken. I therefore selected it as a subject of observation: That vigorous young pig got up and search for the teat at once, or within one minute after their entrance into the world; that if removed several feet from their mother, when aged only a few minutes, they soon find their way back to her, guided apparently by the grunting she makes in answer to the squeaking. In the case I observed the old sow rose in less than an hour and a half after pigging, and went out to eat; the pigs ran about, tried to eat various matters, followed their mother out, and sucked while she stood eating. One pig I put in a bag the moment it was born, and kept it in the dark until it was seven hours old, when I placed it outside the sty, a distance of ten feet from where the sow lay concealed inside the house. The pig soon recognized the low grunting of its mother, went along outside the sty struggling to get over the fence, and in five minutes it was forcing itself through the under bar at one of the few places where that was possible. No sooner than it went without a pause into the pig house to its mother, and was at once like the others in its behavior. Two little pigs I blindfolded at their birth. One of them I placed with its mother at once; it soon found the teat and began to suck. Six hours later I placed the other a little distance from the sow; it reached her in half a minute, after going about rather vaguely; in half a minute more it found the teat. Next day I found that one of the two left with the mother blindfolded had got the blinders off; the other was quite blind, walked about freely, knocking against things. In the afternoon I uncovered its eyes, and it went round and round, as if it had had sight and suddenly lost it. In ten minutes it was scarcely distinguishable from one that had had sight all along. When placed on a chair it knew the height to require considering, went down on its knees and leaped down. When its eyes had been unveiled twenty minutes I placed it and another twenty feet from the sty. The two reached the mother in five minutes and at the same moment. —Popular Science Monthly.

LEGGER'S FLUID (RED), THE UN-IVERSAL DISINFECTANT. (Perma-nate of Soda.) It is the only true disinfectant known, all other preparations sold for this purpose being merely deodorizers (or articles which possess the property of overpowering unpleasant smells by their own pungent and often disagreeable and dangerous qualities.) It is particularly adapted for disinfecting sick rooms in cases of typhoid fever, small pox, cholera, scarlet fever, diarrhoea, and all contagious diseases, and for purifying rooms in which there are and bodies house, butchers' shops, dairies, cellars, &c., it is invaluable, keeping them in a perfectly wholesome state, by merely sprinkling the disinfected fluid over the floors and walls. It keeps dust, dirt, water closets, drains, urinals, &c., sweet and wholesome, by using once or twice a day. For sale by JANNEY & CO.,
